

Words Create Worlds

It is important to learn both how to ask and answer questions.

Words are a way to share your story, and only you can write your story. Words are part of our fabric. Make sure you are writing the story and not someone else.

A meaningful way to learn about a person is by asking questions and taking the time to listen to their answers.

Part 1: Interpersonal Learning

If you wanted to learn about a person, but only had the chance to ask them two (2) to three (3) questions, what would the questions be to learn about their story? Write down these questions.

Part 2: Self-Reflective Learning

If someone wanted to learn about you, but they only had the chance to ask you two (2) to three (3) questions, what would you like them to ask? Write down these questions.

Part 3: Put it in Action!

Ask someone you know the questions you created for Part 1 and/or have someone ask you the questions you created for Part 2.

Did you learn something new about them? Did they learn something new about you? What more do you want to know about them and/or share about yourself? Reflect on this exercise below.
